

Men of Destiny

This is sung by Clemmie and Eleanor Roosevelt in the Oval Office at the White House with Winston and Franklin D Roosevelt having just left the room to go to a war conference. The two women realise that the weight of responsibility on their husband's shoulders is massive and they both feel that what is going on in Winston and FDR's lives is not just happening by chance, but it's their destiny.

They are good and gentle men, courageous brave and wise
They fight their battles with their hearts, no room for compromise
Taking tough decisions, those affecting all our lives
They serve us all so selflessly, with a faith that never dies

We give them encouragement, as they face the great unknown
Surrounded by so many friends, yet out there on their own
No one else can comfort them, as they struggle to their goal
We're always right behind them, ready to console

*The best of men is still only a man
We must do everything we can
To support them in their noble deed
By giving them all the love they need
Helping them to truly be
Our men of destiny*

They are great men they are statesmen, making history
For the good of everyone, they go on tirelessly
Working through the day and night, using all their energy
Trying to save our precious world, to keep us ever free

*The best of men is still only a man
We must do everything we can
To support them in their noble deed
Try giving them all the love they need
Helping them to truly be
Our men of destiny*